The 2015-16 school year was one of dynamic changes to our educational landscape. Our new commissioner pulled back the curtain and presented Texas with a snapshot of the work yet to be done — the gap between current outcomes and the future of our children. For years, we have used the term “at-risk” to simplify the complicated nature of a sub-population of children, struggling to rise to the educational expectations set. In reality, these students are earmarked on a formal list, found in every Texas elementary, middle and high school campus, designated as “will not graduate” with indicators beyond what the child can control (foster care, untreated illness, homelessness, etc.) Predisposing over 60% of Texas students to a questionable future which will result in a precarious economic climate for us all.

During this year, 12 local school districts realized the need to close that gap and raise the bar for every child. We provided daily services to children who were hungry, depressed, scared or merely trying to survive childhood. CISDR is in the business of helping these students break from what they believe is normal by providing tutoring, counseling, food, clothing, parenting education and a host of individualized, tailored assistance. Coming to school hungry, looking for a place to sleep, so sad that hurting yourself is the only option, fear, anxiety and a series of other presenting issues are what CIS staff face every day on campus. Alongside teachers, faculty, and parents, we are devoted to a mission that links all available resources to the lives of these students. Compassion, creativity, comprehensive, collaborative… Communities In Schools, it's who we are. Thank you for making our business your business.

CISDR by the Numbers

In the 2015-16 school year, CISDR worked on 75 school campuses in 12 independent school districts in Dallas, Collin, Ellis, Hunt and Rockwall counties.

59,274 students had access to CISDR help on their campus every day. 7,697 K-12 students benefited from individualized CISDR support. Of these students:

- 91% improved in behavior
- 89% improved by one letter grade
- 96% were promoted to the next grade
- 95% of eligible seniors graduated
- 99% stayed in school
“Robert”
49 percent of students CISDR serves are between the ages of 6 and 11. A majority, like “Robert,” come to school every day with food as the first thing on their minds. His elementary school campus hosts 550 students every day, of which 310 live in a world where food and shelter are not constant benefits. Robert’s parents both work two jobs to sustain the basic needs of three children in a small one room apartment. If the rent goes up at the end of the lease term, the family will move for the second time in 18 months, chasing cheaper housing. There is no guarantee Robert will be back on campus, where he has learned to share, become a stronger reader, and express his anger in a healthier way. CISDR is currently working with Robert’s relatives in finding additional resources to help stabilize the family.

“Myra”
Middle school is already a challenging time in adolescence, but more so for “Myra” as she moves in with her second foster family this school year. Separated from her younger siblings aged 2 and 4, Myra’s 13-year-old heart is broken as she wonders if they are safe and happy. Though her life with her grandmother was difficult, it was consistent and familiar. Myra was once an “A” student, but her grandmother’s incarceration set the wheels of apathy and failure in motion. CISDR is working with students like Myra to help her find strength, focus and a shoulder to lean on when the sadness becomes too much to bear.

“Gwen”
Since the 5th grade, “Gwen” split her time between her father’s house with his new wife and the apartment she shares with her mother, grandmother and three siblings. Often frustrated by her parents’ continued disagreements, she decided to make her own decisions which resulted in a pregnancy in 8th grade. Shortly after the birth of her son, Gwen enrolled in CISDR as her math teacher saw potential in a young lady who had given up in herself. In partnership with teachers, a local health service, and a group of women volunteers, CISDR helped Gwen, and students just like her, to graduate prepared for what college and career will bring.

“If we truly believe that students are the future of our society, it is imperative that every community take intentional action to ensure that barriers to the future are removed. That’s what Communities In Schools of the Dallas Region does and why the support you provide is vital.”

CISDR GEMS (Girls Exploring Math and Science)

“Jasmine” is smart, articulate and tries hard in her classes. CISDR provides tutoring and monitors her grades to keep her on track. This year she joined the CISDR GEMS (Girls Exploring Math and Science) program on her campus. This gender-based STEM initiative helps her learn in a creative, interactive, self-paced style. The GEMS program is sponsored by Time Warner Cable and ExxonMobil.

Ketchup Saturdays

When “Anika” wasn’t turning in her work on time and struggling during class, CISDR found her reading below 3rd grade level. After meeting with her parents and teacher, she was enrolled in our Ketchup Saturday program to improve her reading and “ketchup” on her class work. Ketchup Saturday is sponsored by the Target Foundation, with support from Dollar General and Junior League of Dallas.

Capital One MathCorps

3rd grader “Jordan” was acing his schoolwork but didn’t do so well on his STAAR test. He made it to the 4th grade, but he still wasn’t working at his full potential. As he neared another battery of tests, he joined Capital One MathCorps, which helped ease his test-taking anxiety. MathCorps is a three week summer tutoring program from the able hands of volunteer Capital One associates.

Sandy’s ScholarTrips

After a few years in CISDR, 7th grader “Tiffany” was turning her grades around. At the end of the school year, she and 11 other middle schoolers took a trip to Fossil Rim in Glen Rose to learn about animals and life science. This was made possible by Sandy’s ScholarTrips, a program started by former President & CEO Sandy Chavarria to help CISDR students learn about the world beyond their neighborhoods.
Questions & Answers

CISDR speaks of working with “at-risk” students. What does that mean?

The mandate of CISDR and all Texas CIS affiliates is to provide support to students who are designated on the list every school district keeps (per the Texas Education Agency) of students in need of additional support to be promoted and to graduate on time. The TEA at-risk list contains indicators such as history of failing core classes or standardized tests, teen pregnancy, truancy, or family crisis that impact academic success.

How does CISDR partner with a school?

CISDR is typically approached by either a principal or the school district themselves, in need of additional support for their students. After an assessment of student needs and interventions already in place, CISDR contracts via the school district for specific campuses.

Aren’t you doing what school counselors already do?

We complement what schools counselors are charged with on a campus site. When a campus of 500 has 85% of its students on the at-risk list, one counselor is pulled in several directions. CISDR can help through hands-on work, community partnerships, and a battalion of CISDR-brokered resources. CISDR frees teachers to teach and has the time to assess root causes of student issues.

How do you measure student success, especially in hitting those outcome numbers?

CISDR staff are housed on campus and able to work with identified students every day, tweaking interventions throughout the school year until an impactful approach is found. By reviewing student grades, attendance and behavior every 6 weeks, while meeting regularly with teachers and staff to discuss progress, CISDR is able to make changes to their strategy in real time. CISDR also engages parents in their child’s success to ensure wrap-around services 24/7. Saturation plus comprehensive, timely and consistent intervention is the key.

Student Statistics

74% of the students we work with are economically disadvantaged, and 60% of CISDR are “at-risk” according to Texas Education Agency criteria. This year, we addressed the needs of:

- 429 homeless students
- 635 students who have been held back a grade
- 183 teen parents
- 235 referred for severe delinquent conduct
- 701 elementary students reading below grade level
- 46 gifted and talented students
- 47 students with incarcerated parents

Demographics

- Female: 51%
- Male: 49%
- Hispanic: 62%
- African American: 27%
- Anglo/White: 7%
- Asian/Pacific Islander: 3%
Throughout the 2015-16 year, CISDR put on a series of fundraising events of varying scopes and sizes. These events helped raise money for the organization’s mission while expanding awareness of CISDR throughout the Dallas philanthropic community.

We kicked off the school year with the Golf Tournament in September 2015, followed closely by the Line Drive Luncheon in November. In 2016, we had the Dream Achievers Luncheon in February and the Dallas Bridge Bash in April. Finally, we ended the summer with the CIS Soirée for Students in September.

“CIS has helped me get supplies for school, which helps me out a lot! Also, I get more motivated to get my grades up.”

— Jason B., 8th grader

“CIS collaborates with me to make sure that we have a healthy environment at our school. They also help me provide resources and communication to the parents of our students and help in any way possible.”

— Jane Becker, School Nurse
“Our partnership with Communities in Schools is invaluable. Our CIS representative fills a role in our school that supports multiple departments on campus in unique ways, including our English language learners, students who are new to the country, and our counseling office. Our CIS is more than a resource—she is a friend, a mentor, and light of hope. Her level of caring extends beyond the walls of our school and into the homes of our families. Our communication and access to assistance is so strong because of the work that our CIS does for us each day.”

“I think the CIS program is essential to exemplary parent and community engagement. It ensures a strengthened and reinforced bridge between our school and key stakeholders. It also supports our academic program and creates partnerships between our school and key universities. It is essential that this program is not only kept at our school but maintained and reinforced with key district support.”

— Dallas ISD Principal
